cornerstone chatham college pittsburgh, pennsylvania

A spirit pervades the Chatham community—one which almost eludes definition, but which is essentially that of change. The trend toward increasing liberality, through questioning, re-evaluation, and involvement, is respectfully tempered by a consciousness of traditional values. This spirit has led to reconsideration of the academic curriculum and re-evaluation of student government. It has shown itself in the re-examination of religious life at Chatham, resulting in a series of intellectual discussions centering upon Religious Perspectives on the Problems of Man. It has manifested itself in the re-assessment of public occasions presentations and the initiation of a concentrated program to orient students toward a knowledge and appreciation of the Non-Western world.

Yet, underlying the flexibility and liberality of the new administration which has now consolidated its policies and gained the enthusiastic support of the entire college community, there seems to be an awareness that the “privilege of pioneering” has its roots in the past history of the college. There is an abiding awareness that Chatham is more than an aggregation of the individuals who are presently spending a four-year “lapse of time” on its campus; in short, the college is more than those who have gone before, are present now, or will come afterward. And there is also the recognition that the four-year transients graduate from Chatham College, having been imbued with the spirit of enlightened liberality for which the college stands and which will ultimately transcend the college community itself.

We dedicate ourselves and the 1962 Cornerstone, not to the spirit of liberality for its own sake, nor to the preservation of tradition alone, but to the spirit of change which balances the two; which keeps us always in front of the hands of the clock, yet trodding firmly on the time-tested foundations of the past. For, as John Livingston Lowes said of Swarthmore College:

Now if there is anything today that we need it is that the balance between the steadying power of tradition and the open-minded responsiveness to new conditions which both this college and its President represent. Tradition without flexibility is mortmain—the dead hand of the past upon the aspirations and ideals of the living present. Liberality untempered by tradition degenerates into the avid acceptance of all the yeasty collection of fads and vagaries that boil and bubble in eager but untrained minds.

President, Gail Siegrist, Vice-President, Jane Saunders; Secretary, Patti Foss; Treasurer, Lila Latham.

Four years ago there were few thoughts given to that fast-approaching hour when the carefree Class of 1962 would be leaving Chatham College for whatever lies beyond, but now the hands of the Chatham clock have swung full sweep and are about to strike upon the moment of departure.

Once a mere quarter-hour old, we found ourselves to be a large assortment of muddle-headed outer-directed individuals darting across the face of the clock, attempting to gain a clear perspective and establish a regular direction for our further progress.

The quarter passed quickly, then we suddenly dropped through a second year in which a lessening of spirit accompanied a growing socio-political-aesthetic awareness. A half-completed education was sure to expose the amount yet to be learned, and the prospects were awesome; but a pause for reflection at the half-hour recalled an abundance of knowledge already in our grasp and ready to be swept along. Many dropped off while the hands were down, but those who stayed for the upward climb were gratified to find their direction determined and their enthusiasm restored.

By the end of the third-quarter the assortment of clear-headed, inner-directed individuals was watching eagerly for each change upon the face, making every minute count until the last.

The hour which once seemed so long in coming has now arrived, and our minute accomplishments as well as our grandiose ones have formed a pattern, a college education of which we may be proud. We have found advice worth following in Lord Chesterfield's words: "I recommend you to take care of the minutes, for the hours will take care of themselves."

President, Louise Sonnenberg; Vice-President, Judy Strain; Secretary, Pinky Rosen; Treasurer, Sue Rockwell.

For the Juniors, 1961-62 means the continuation of individual development. It means a strengthening of conviction and commitment as the majority concentrate in their major field—with a few last minute reconsiderations—and tutorial subjects crystallize. This year also means talking “some” about world issues, probing into the meaning of glass menageries or Freudian symbols, tripping to the Pittsburgh International, and perfecting the twenty-fourth Arts Card. The Class of '63 discovers that they have the distinction of being the only class to have shrunk radically, the only class never to have won a Song Contest, the only class with a living mascot, and the only class with an occasion to render a wedding march on the chapel bells. Junior year means the usual fun and games battling for reserve books, struggling with blue books, and turning out en masse for the annual class meeting. It means two members planning safaris to Africa, several concocting a prom, and others playing bridge, playing the guitar, and playing cupid to favorite professors on Valentine's Day. Each Junior settles down to an enthusiastic pursuit of knowledge in the direction of her choice, as the hands of the Chatham clock begin the ascent from the third-quarter . . .

Secretary, Liz Dinham; Vice-President, Sally Terbush; Treasurer, Sue Clewell; President, Lolly Smith.

Sophomore year brings a slight tempering of exuberance and of number. It brings John Tabor for Councilman amidst the clamor of posters, the shuffling of pamphlets, and the eleventh hour scramble of political reports. The year is one of "Persian Ecstasy," complete with Sophomore Queen, of checking Freshmen supremacy by proclaiming Friday as the favorite day, of poring over Kant and Logical Positivism. Despite frenzied excursions to museums and packs of cigarettes smoked over tomorrow's speech, there is still time to deck the chapel lights in red, sit typing on the bathroom floor at five a.m. and take a mid-week beer break. Sophomore year brings rooms stuffed with newspapers, dawn twisting parties, showers for the pinned, and switching drawers. It brings India to Chatham, trips of peace-loving students to Washington, and choosing a major. It is developing confidence, consolidation of doubts, and increasing intellectual curiosity, as the hands of the Chatham clock have paused at the half-hour . . .

President, Jane Levitt; Vice-President, Judi Wetlaufer; Secretary, Marilyn White; Treasurer, Pam Proksa.

College is the pursuit of learning, a meeting place of ideas, a home for questioning, realization, and awakening individualism. Freshman year is communal tooth-brushing, a load of laundry all pink-tinted, an ear-marked Western Civ book, and a typewriter with one sticking key. It is laughter over Snack Bar coffee, a request for dinks for formal-wear and for curlers, and a professor pinning up cartoons on a bulletin board. It is 8:30 a.m. H.D. and B., Thursday night phone calls, and hanging Sophomores in effigy. This year is the First Blind Date for the Big and Little Sister Dance, the white dresses and class colors, the overwhelming conquest of Song Contest. It is short-sheeting beds and scheming over Freshmen Entertainment. But more than this, freshman year is the beginning of an awareness that college is an Alma Mater, a spirited community of friends, a place of academic challenge, a new way of life, as the hands of the Chatham clock have reached the quarter-hour . . .

So very little space remains in which to recapture the experience of creating the Cornerstone. One can only mention briefly the immense amount of energy which has been expended upon it.

Even with a late start, Nan, whose inexhaustible well of patience and skill produced a constant stream of truly fine, original ideas, finished all the layouts early. Unfortunately for her, this left more time for revision which she watched with only rare, but muffled winces. It was Sheila who provided formal, consistent organization and coherence to the work, keeping all the files in perfect order, while Wendy, rushing to get photographs of Mellon with every change of temperature and fit them subtly into the book, fought page upon page with uncompromising standards. Helen became the emergency relief who was called any and every time she was needed. Through it all, Mickey efficiently recorded the expenses, somehow keeping the debts under control. And then there were those who were not on the staff but were always there in times of dire distress, which were many.

To the advisors, Mrs. Brown, Mr. Smith and Mr. Ossmann, who watched us with a skeptically raised eyebrow, must be given a great deal of thanks, as well as the Public Relations Office whose files were always available to the Cornerstone staff. Whit's humor and Walt's dependability also proved immeasurably helpful. And without Mr. Stewart of the S. K. Smith Co., and Mr. McWilliams of Foote and Davies, there would be neither covers nor books.
